EDITOR'S PAGE

The Grapevine Magazine is published with the purpose of establishing a forum whereby important local issues may be presented and appraised, pro and con, by local people.

This magazine will provide topics and space so that local people may write in and express their opinions. Topics for next month are on page 4. The staff will not discriminate, in regard to the side a writer takes, when selecting articles to be printed. We will try to print both sides of all issues.

The Grapevine staff will at all times try to recognize and publish the facts without distortion. We will publish, but not always support, many articles by people who write in and disagree with individuals, groups, events, or institutions.

In addition to the forum, this magazine will specialize in articles written by local professional people on topics such as law, medicine, religion, fashion, education, foods, business, sports, youth, and other areas of local interest.

Letters to the editor will be accepted and published whenever space will allow. Letters of fewer than 150 words will be given preference. All letters are subjected to condensation.

MAKING MURDER

By Whitney M. Young, Jr.

1968 was a landmark year in the history of American justice — it was the first year that no person was executed by the state.

The fight against the legal murder that is the death penalty has been carried to the Supreme Court, and the fate of 467 persons in death rows in the prisons of America depends on its decision.

The Court is being asked to decide that the death penalty constitutes unconstitutional "cruel and unusual punishment," and that it violates the rights of accused persons by allowing juries to impose the death sentence without rigid standards for its use, and by deciding guilt and punishment at the same time.

There is no way that a civilized society can condone the death penalty, a barbaric custom that makes the state a legal murderer and legitimizes violence.

Since 1940, 4,000 people have been executed and the majority have been Negroes. Almost without exception, the victims of the death penalty have been poor.

The death penalty has historically been a weapon used against black people, often innocent of any crime at all. Rape, defined by many Southerners as an "uppity" look in the eyes of a black man, has often been punished by the death penalty. A black man in Alabama who pleaded guilty to armed robbery was sentenced to death a few years ago.

Poor people and minority groups in general cannot afford the high-powered legal defense that can prove their innocence or convince juries and judges to be lenient. The American way of justice is highly discriminatory, and in this most awful of punishments, it has been more biased than usual.

The main argument used by those who still favor the death penalty is that it deters potential criminals. People who otherwise might commit a murder are supposed to be stopped by the realization that they might pay for it with their lives.

The figures just don't support this conclusion. Few murders are premeditated; most take place in the heat of the moment, when people aren't able to weigh the possible punishment. Besides, what criminal thinks he'll be caught?

The kind of unstable individual who will commit a murder isn't going to be influenced by the penalty, except in a negative way. One expert has written: "People about to commit murder do not rationally weigh the act against the penalty. On the other hand, some individuals have unconscious drives to place themselves in positions where they will be punished with utmost severity." In other words, they kill so that their own suicidal wishes will be gratified.

The best way to determine whether the death penalty actually deters is by comparing states with the penalty to similar states that have abolished it. No differences in the murder rate have been found.

And if the death penalty is supposed to deter, why hold executions in secret? Why not televise hangings in public places if the intent is to scare people from committing crimes? The very secrecy indicated that supporters of the death penalty are guilty about it, and see it as something brutal and indecent.

If a man is imprisoned and later found to be innocent, he can be released. But no such reprieve is available to an executed man. One study of people who were executed or imprisoned for life found that ten percent were later found to have been innocent.

We hear so much about violence and the need for a more humane society. Private violence is encouraged by the kind of public violence that lets the state strap a man in an electric chair or puts him in a gas chamber.

The death penalty is an ugly leftover from the irrational past, and the sooner it is abolished, the closer we will come to being a society that respects life and turns its back on violence.

TOMORROW IS A NEW DAY

Write it on your heart that every day is the best day of the year. He is rich who owns the day, and no one owns the day who allows it to be invaded with fret and anxiety. Finish every day and be done with it. You have done what you could. Some blunders and absurdities, no doubt, crept in. Forget them as soon as you can, tomorrow is a new day; begin it well and serenely, with too high a spirit to be cumbered with your old nonsense. This new day is too dear, with its hopes and invitations, to waste a moment on the yesterdays.

the man who never made a mistake

A great number of otherwise well-qualified men never seem to rise above a certain level. They seem to have a deathly fear of ever being wrong.

They never want to make a decision because they never want to make a mistake.

If it is your goal in life to be known to your associates as the man who never made a mistake, then be prepared to be known also as the man who never accomplished very much.

Today, make a few decisions of your own. They may be right or they may be wrong. But you made them — and tomorrow you may find that your decisions are easier to make, and are more often right than wrong.

MARIJUANA AND

Grapevine Magazine in the interest of public service publishes this article so that the local people may know the most reliable information that is compiled to this date on the topic of dangerous pills and marijuana.

The material below appears in the pamphlet "No Secret" and most of the information was prepared by the Bureau of Drug Abuse Control of the Food and Drug Administration of the U.S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

MARIJUANA (Marihuana)

Identification of Marijuana

Marijuana is usually in the form of a crushed mixture of leaves and flowering tops of a plant known as Cannabis sativa. It is usually rolled into a homemade cigarette and frequently contains "rough material" such as seeds and stems. Marijuana is commonly spoken of as pot, grass, tea, weed, stuff, reefers, or sticks.

Abuse

The physiological and psychological effects resulting from the use of marijuana as given in the 1965 report on drug dependence of the World Health Organization are many.

Physiological effects include:

- ataxia (inability to coordinate movements)
- lowering amounts of glucose in blood
- lowering of over-all temperature
- increased appetite and desire for sweets
- inflammation of mucous membranes

Some of the subjective effects of marijuana are:

- hilarity
- carelessness
- distortion of sensation and perception
- impairment of judgment and memory
- irritability and confusion

Dependence

The use of marijuana may develop a psychological dependence. Because so many users of narcotics report previous use of marijuana, concern should be given not only to the habit forming use of marijuana but also to the serious possibility that it will serve as a stepping stone to more serious drug addiction.

DANGEROUS PILLS

STIMULANTS

Amphetamines — "Pep Pills"

This group of drugs, which includes the amphetamines, directly stimulates the central nervous system.

Identification of Amphetamines

Amphetamines are known to drug abusers as pep pills, wake-ups, eye-openers, co-pilots, truck drivers, or bennies. As with other dangerous drugs, the slang names applied to them by abusers are frequently derived from the shapes and colors of capsules and tablets, their effects, or their use.

Abuse

Because the body develops a tolerance to amphetamines, abusers increase their dosage gradually, a factor which exaggerates the normal effects of these drugs and results in:

- excitability
 - tremor of the hands
 - talkativeness
 - restlessness
 - enlarged pupils
 - sleeplessness
 - heavy perspiration
- Continued abuse of amphetamines can cause:

- high blood pressure
- abnormal heart rhythms
- heart attacks
- suicidal attempts

In serious cases, there is a drug psychosis resembling schizophrenia, delusions and hallucinations, both auditory and visual. An added danger occurs when amphetamines are taken by long-distance drivers to ward off sleep, for they are unaware of their fatigue until it overcomes them and possibly causes a serious accident on the highway.

Dependence

The use of amphetamines may develop a psychological dependence. Amphetamines also may cause unacceptable sensitivity to other medication so that indicated treatment of the amphetamine user may be unsafe.

DEPRESSANTS

Barbiturates — Sedatives, Sleeping Pills

Identification of Barbiturates

Barbiturates are known to drug abusers as barbs, candy, goofballs, sleeping pills, or peanuts. Specific types are often named after their color or shape. For example, solid yellow capsules are known to abusers as yellows, yellow jackets or nimbles. Red capsules are called reds, pinks, red birds, red devils, seggy, and seccy. Red and blue capsules are known as rainbows, red and blues, or double trouble. Solid blue capsules are known by abusers as blues, blue birds, blue devils, or blue heavens.

Abuse

Continued and excessive dosages of barbiturates result in:

- slurred speech
- staggering
- loss of balance and falling
- quick temper
- a quarrelsome disposition
- coma (with danger of pneumonia and death)

Overdose, particularly when taken in conjunction with alcohol, may result in unconsciousness and death, unless proper medical treatment is given.

Statistics on deaths show that more people die as a result of barbiturate poisoning than from any other kind of poison.

Dependence

The use of barbiturates may develop a physical dependence. Such dependence does not usually develop from dosages normally used in medical practice.

Withdrawal symptoms usually are far more dangerous than those resulting from narcotics withdrawal.

MEDICINE

WAYS TO CUT YOUR MEDICAL BILL

Although medical care cost more than it did ten years ago, and it's still rising, there are ways to cut medical cost and yet maintain the quality of care received.

Having a family doctor and discussing fees with him in advance is the most important bill-cutting alley. Since he has your medical history, some costly tests won't have to be repeated when ill. He also controls much of your other medical spending which can save you money.

A list of general practitioners or internists are available at the local medical society, hospital or medical school nearby. Their training, length of practice, professional accomplishments and fees should be compared before choosing.

Your family doctor can sometimes advise you over the phone for minor health problems which saves time and expense of office calls. House calls are more expensive and should be in the doctors judgement.

The doctor's advice would probably cost less than the "miraculous" or "secret" new cures and drugs. He can also prescribe less expensive drugs with the equivalent of the brand names.

Other ways to cut expenses is to buy adequate medical insurance such as Blue Shield or major medical. You can save money on group policies.

But the best way to save money is to use the free health services available in the communities public health department and following good health habits giving your doctor a chance to head off emergencies.

FACTS

- After graduation 40 per cent of Bullard High School students go to a 4 year college.
- Male drivers have two and one-half times as many accidents as female drivers.
- Columbia, Carver, Franklin, and Lincoln Elementary Schools have an average of 99% of minority students.

BUSINESS

SHOULD YOU INVEST IN LAND?

Due to the fact that land can't be manufactured, and the population continues to increase, the demand for land continues to increase. This is especially true in the warmer climates such as in California and Florida.

Over a million homes and apartments are built each year to house the growing population. By the year 1980 construction may double to accommodate the increase in population expected to reach 350 million by the year 2000.

Some of the advantages of land investments is the continuous rise in prices, leverage, tax on sales, prepaid interests and its hedge against inflation.

During the past two decades land costs have tripled, yet only 20% to 25% down payment is necessary for purchase, compared with a minimum of 80% to buy stock.

The tax on sales of property can be reduced by using the installment sale if the owner receives less than 30% down payment in the year of sale. Also, if the seller accepts prepaid interest, land can be purchased with money that normally goes to income tax. The well selected land increasing value would keep your investment way ahead of inflation.

With all the advantage and profits of investing in land, not all land increases in value. Among the many things that hold the value of property down and should be known when selecting land are geological problems such as drainage or water supply, and legal aspects such as zoning and the existence of easements.

For the small investor, it must be remembered that it may take years before the value increases. During periods when the value levels off or slumps he must be able to wait out the slump, when wise to do so. These are some reasons why it is wise for the small investor or small investment groups to seek help from an expert to select, protect and promote the investment.

- The Fresno City population as of March, 1969, now total 168,000 people.
